You should also consider the following:

Speaker

Who is the speaker who produced this piece? What is their background and why are they making the points they are making? Is there a bias in what was written? You must be able to cite evidence from the text or what you are given to support your answer.

Occasion

What is the Occasion? In other words, the time and place of the piece. What event or situation prompted the author to write this piece? How do you know from the text? What event led to its publication or development? It is particularly important that you understand the context that encouraged the writing to happen.

Audience

Who is the intended Audience? This refers to the group of readers to whom this piece is deliberately directed. The audience may be one person, a small group or a large group; it may be a certain person or a certain people. What assumptions can you make about the audience? Is it mixed racial/sex group? What social class? What political party? Who was the document created for and how do you know? Are there any words or phrases that are unusual or different? Does the speaker use language the specific for a unique audience? Does the speaker evoke God? Nation? Liberty? History? Hell? How do you know? Why is the speaker using this type of language?

Purpose

What is the purpose? Meaning, the reason behind the text. In what ways does he convey this message? How would you perceive the speaker giving this speech? What is the document saying? What is the emotional state of the speaker? How is the speaker trying to spark a reaction in the audience? How is the document supposed to make you feel? This helps you examine the argument or its logic.

Subject

What is the subject of the document? What is the document about? (I.e. the general topic, content, and ideas contained in the text.) How do you know this?

Tone

What is the attitude of the speaker based on the text? What is the attitude a writer takes towards this subject or character: is it serious, humorous, sarcastic, ironic, satirical, tongue-in-cheek, solemn, and objective. How do you know? Where in the text does it support your answer?

Style

What stylistic conventions does the text employ in terms of its format, layout, formality of language (i.e. register), writing style, grammar, voice, use of images, font type, etc.? Are these the conventions normally associated with this text type? Or does the speaker deliberately choose to - flout the typical conventions associated with this text type
