Big 5 Analysis

Are you making plans for your wife's death?

Introduction – Overview of Big 5	Text type: advert / newspaper for life insurance Content overview: Audience./Purpose: persuasive – older, married men Tone: varies from humorous and colloquial to intimidating and emotive – all with the overall aim of being persuasive Language summary: questions, emotive references, financial statistics;
Audience / purpose / context (if known) – Who does the text target? What does the author wish to achieve through the text?	• Married, older men – old enough to have considered life insurance; • The text is structured so as to gain attention / frighten the reader / direct them to act "well, you could start with the bottom right hand corner of this page." • Challenges societal belief that men outlive women; plays on men's fear of being left to support family alone; • Also likely to be read by women! Who would also react emotively and – therefore – be more likely to take the insurance!
Content / theme – What is literally 'happening' in the text? What is it about? What are the main ideas of the text?	• Death of a wife; • Many men assume they'll go first; • Assumption that most men don't want to face up to this fact; • Reinforces gender stereotypes – suggestion that women still do the majority of work for home and children; • Assumes most men would agree with the stereotypes – not written to offend (it wouldn't suit purpose) written to ensure men face the reality of their situation.
Tone / mood – How does the text make you and/or the target audience feel? Describe the atmosphere of the text.	• Second person / direct address; • Humorous / conversational / colloquial tone – "where on earth…?", "Heaven knows …" • Informal interjections add to conversational feel – it sounds like someone talking "Well, …" • Slightly critical of the reader;
